

An Example For Farmers.

Rhea Hayne, a Georgia correspondent of Home and Farm gives an encouraging account of the work of a small farmer.

Read it and take courage:

There is in mind a staunch young farmer who started in a modest way in growing hay, corn and minor crops with a few hogs and a little other livestock. He raised some cotton last year—sixteen bales on twelve acres—but he raised other things, too. He has sold a quantity of hay at $25 per ton, and people came to his barn for it. He has sold a lot of corn in the ear with the husk on it at $1.25 per bushel. He sold many sweet potatoes at $1.00 per bushel. To cap the climax he brought into his little town a few nice hams and some other country cured meats. He realized an all-round price of 18 cents per pound for his productions.

Now that's somewhat of a big story, but its true, and more than that, you've got to figure on that sort of a farmer as a future factor in the country. He will be a safe and conservative citizen at all times, and he will be the man to count upon. In addition to all his other benefactions in this respect you've got to consider him in a new light still, that of supplying the needs of his little family. You can drop in there any time and you will find the country table laden with the best food on earth, the kind grown at home and prepared at the same place.

If the average farmer would follow such course there would be a great many who would quit complaining and wear the smile of prosperity. But, on the contrary, there are hundreds of cotton farmers throughout the South who are not growing sufficient food supplies. These have to dump their entire revenue into the laps of the grain growers. While this is beneficial to the grain growers, still it works a great hardship on the cotton farmer—or any other single-crop man. The only avenue of escape is in diversification.

The Drug Habit.

Faced by the startling figures that over 1,000,000 people of the United States are addicted to the "drug habit," which means the frequent entrance of opium, cocaine, chloroform, and other deleterious sedatives into the stomach or blood, the Department of Agriculture has recently issued thousands of copies of a bulletin telling of the extreme danger which lies in the indiscriminate use of certain headache mixtures retailed in quantities over the country, and thousands of copies of another bulletin that sounds a warning against the drinking of many of the popular "soft" beverages dispensed freely as soda water, and against the filling of helpless infants with numerous soothing concoctions that still the squalls of the baby by narcotic effects.

It is a matter of personal knowledge to most of us that the headache remedy, the soft drink, and the soothing syrup are in very common use, but it is not, perhaps, generally known that a hundred sanitarians realize a handsome profit each year from their treatments of the victims of the drug habit which is as much, if not more, an outcome of gulping down "refreshing" soda mixture or headache soothers, and the employment of baby quieting compounds, as it is the result of prolonged use of narcotics, narcotics, made necessary in cases under the care of physicians of growing out of the "dope fiend's" influence.

Years of hard fighting must be kept up by the Department of Agriculture, if it hopes to contend successfully with the widespread drug habits cultivated at soda fountains, and in the hours when the family baby, or babies, is writhing and walling with the pain of colic or from numerous other ills which beset the precarious existence of the average infant. One of the great lessons to be learned by the American people is that it is not real kindness to "dope" the baby, or tickle the palate of the growing child with drugged cold drinks. We would not undertake to say what the colic-plagued baby should be filled with, when he cries out in the night; that is for the family physician to discuss. Nor would we recommend headache cure or relief. Again does the office of the physicians take precedence. But the laymen may cite the awful fact of the so many thousand victims of injurious but dream-making drugs, and may urge that the soda water habit be confined to the fruit syrup drinks; that the baby be allowed to work his lung until a competent medical man can prescribe for him, or her, proper relief, rather than that the loving and ignorant parent pour down the unresisting throat a quantity of harmful syrup "highly recommended" and pretty sure to make the infant sleep, sometimes, be it emphasized, for eternity, and always with the danger of laying a foundation for a tendency to use drugs later in life, and, finally, the layman may urge upon the sufferers of headache that they refrain from indiscriminate drug taking, and give their physicians an opportunity of locating the seat of their afflictions and correcting their physical woes.—Charleston Evening Post.

Stand Aside

See, you old farmers who have never done anything else, it might be well to prepare to stand aside and give place to the "back to the land" crowd. It now looks as if they are going to push you out of the way. Dr. Laura D. Gill, a graduate of the Wellesley College in a talk to the alumnae association said "Girls talk farming." She does not believe that all girls could make a living that way but she suggests that it is a unique opening for them. She said:

"The things for a girl to do is to seek out some unique occupation and do pioneer work, if necessary. Professional farming is a line which girls may take up to a good advantage, institutional management and positions as superintendents are exceptional chances for the college girl whose higher education fits her to handle the various questions with which she comes in contact in a broad and intelligent manner.

"When a college girl leaves college she should have already made up her mind what she intends to do. She should take an account of stock, as it were, and see what qualification what finances and what preferences she has for the different fields which are open to her."

It is certain that if girl graduates don overalls and take to the farms the question of keeping the boys on the farm will be solved and in a few years the story of Ruth and Boaz will be acted again between the cotton rows if not in the harvest fields.

If the Census man has missed you hunt him up and tell him so. He will be glad for you to do this as he is paid in proportion to the number of inhabitants and he will not intentionally overlook you, and it is most important that every individual be counted in order that our population will show as much increase as possible. We have heard of several people who have been overlooked and we wish to impress upon all such the importance of giving their names to the enumerator.

Not one case in ten requires internal treatment.

Where there is no swelling or fever Noah's Liniment will accomplish more than any internal remedy.

One trial will convince you. Noah's Liniment penetrates; requires but little rubbing.

Here's the Proof

Mr. W. R. Taylor, a resident of Richmond, Va., writes: "For the past four years I have been traveling Eastern North Carolina, where I contracted malaria and rheumatism. Recently I have used Noah's Liniment with beneficial results, and take pleasure in recommending same to anyone suffering with rheumatism."

"I caught cold and had a severe attack of rheumatism in my left shoulder and could not raise my arm without much pain. I was persuaded to try Noah's Liniment, and in less than a week was entirely free from pain. I feel justified in speaking of it in the highest terms. A. Crooker, Dorchester, Mass."

DON'T OVERLOOK Good Things.

A young chap came into the store Saturday—wanted to know the minute he got inside whether we had such and such a suit that was in the window on Monday.

No, it was sold. "I knew it," he said "a friend of mine has it on."

"I've admired that suit in the window two or three times, but I'll jiggered it I thought it could be bought for the price he told me he paid. Get anything like it? Who made the suit, anyway?"

"It's a Schloss Bro's & Co. Suit—"
